TRAINMEN MUST NOT STRIKE; PRESIDENT
READY TO STEP IN*Wilson Determined Trunk
Lines Shall Not be Tied Up.*CONFERENCE THIS AFTERNOON*Railroad Officials, Representatives of Conductors and Trainmen, and Government Officials Will Take a Part in the White House Party.

United Press Telegram.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—President Wilson is determined to prevent a general strike of the great trunk lines of the United States. The roads must settle the strike question with their employers, said the President this morning. In an interview given the correspondents upon his return from his vacation trip.

The President does not intend that the threatened strike of the conductors and trainmen shall materialize. That he will do everything in his power to prevent it was shown by his action upon arrival at the White House. He immediately sent for all of the documents in the case, and began arrangements for the conference to be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock in his private office with representatives of the railroads, their employees and several legislators. If necessary the President will step in publicly and ask that the demands of the men be settled by a board of arbitrators, as did President Roosevelt in the anthracite coal strike. The conductors and trainmen have insisted that they will agree to arbitration, and the President does not believe that the roads would refuse his demand.

A statement given out from Secretary of Labor Wilson's office this morning shows that the following will attend the conference: President Wilson, Secretary of Labor Wilson, Senator Newlands, chairman of the Senate committee on commerce and labor; Representative Clayton, chairman of the House judiciary committee; President Samuel R. Rife of Pennsylvania (lines); President Daniel Willard of the Baltimore & Ohio system; President George W. Stevens of the Chesapeake & Ohio; Frank Turnbull, chairman of the executive board of the Chesapeake & Ohio; President W. C. Brown of the New York Central lines; President W. W. Warren B. Stone, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Engineers; W. F. Hartley, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Firemen; O. B. Garrettson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors, and W. C. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

Carroll and Lee will enter the conference with the authority of the members of their organizations to call a strike at a moment's notice.

Officers of the brotherhoods held a conference in their hotel here this morning and agreed not to give anything for publication until after the conference this afternoon. The railroad officials took a similar stand.

It became known this morning that Secretary of Labor Wilson will withdraw his opposition to the Newlands amendment to the Erdman act. If the act is passed by the House and signed by the President, it is expected that the railroads will agree to arbitration under its provisions. The number of arbitrators is uncertain.

When the conference of railroad managers was held in New York this morning to consider the ratification by the employees of the strike agreement, it was announced that already 900 employees have gone out on strike.

Los Angeles.

United Press Telegram.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 14.—With 14 dead and 40 injured in the hospitals, it is believed today that the death list as a result of last night's trolley wreck on the outskirts of Los Angeles will reach 20.

The wreck occurred at the Vineyard station when three trains drew into the passenger depot. Overhead wire trouble caused the first train to come to a halt and put out danger signals. When the second arrived at the station the motorman saw the stalled train ahead and was backing his train from the main track preparatory to the phasing of danger signals when the third came into view, crashing into the second train.

Summoned by the cries of the victims, the passengers of the first train ran to their rescue, and found the telescoped cars of the second and third trains lying in a tangled mass. Injured passengers with legs and arms broken, begged the rescuers to shoot them, to place them out of their suffering. Within two hours 12 bodies had been removed from the wreckage.

OF THE WEST PENN*But Economies Will Not

Manager W. E. Moore; Cheat River
Project is Being Pushed Forward.

A period of temporary retrenchment has set in with the West Penn Traction & Water Power Company. That it will be of brief duration is the opinion of high officials. The financial troubles which have involved the Kuhns has depressed their securities. As a consequence, new extensions and big construction work must be held up for the present. Until matters are adjusted, all construction work will be met from the surplus earnings of the system. These are considerable. The report for the year ending May 31 shows $566,000 available for this purpose, after the usual dividends have been declared.

General Manager W. E. Moore today announced that necessary construction and extensions will be pushed, even though it is necessary to halt other projects. The company is under contract to deliver power which will mean a gross revenue of $230,000 a year, and this must be taken care of. Two large turbines have been contracted for installation at the power house here, and at least one of them will be put into service as soon as possible.

Other contracts are under way and on most of these work will continue. General Manager Moore stated that the work was going on as usual at the Cheat river water power development. Reports have been circulated that this project would be abandoned for the present.

It was stated that probably not more than 50 employees of the company will be effected as a consequence of the retrenchment policy. While every effort will be made to pare down expenses, it is not to be done at the expense of efficiency in operation.

"The West Penn is going to run," declared Mr. Moore. "Until we can market our securities, we must depend upon our earnings for improvements, and these must be conserved. However, many of our extensions must be continued, and we shall use every effort to see that they are. The West Penn is in splendid condition. We expect within a short time to be able to resume work on those projects which it is necessary to suspend for the present."

It was stated that the extension of the West Penn from Hecla to Latrobe will be pushed.

at Trotter.*TWO SONS ESCAPE LIKE FATE*Armed by Shots Fired by Crazy

Was Accused of Being Unfaithful.

Crazed by jealousy, so neighbors assert, George Meholik, 40 years old, murdered his wife and three children at Trotter early this morning and then committed suicide. An unborn child, said to be the cause of the tragedy, makes the toll of death actually six. Two sons, now orphans, were the only members of the family to escape their doom.

THE DEAD.

GEORGE MEHOLIK, 40 years old, husband and father.

MARTY MEHOLIK, 32 years old, wife and mother.

IRENE MEHOLIK, 8 years old, a daughter.

ANDREW MEHOLIK, 6 years old, a son.

ANTON MEHOLIK, 3 years old, a son. The murder occurred shortly after midnight when the mother and children were asleep. All of the victims were shot through the breast, two of them through the heart. They died almost instantly.

Meholik left orphans two of his boys, George, 14, and John, 15, the only survivors of the family. They are being cared for by the only relative in this country. Meholik's brother Michael, who lives in one of the little red houses across the street.

Every indication points to the fact that the murders were premeditated. The husband and wife had been quarreling for months, ever since he was summoned to their former home at Salge, Saranogee, Austria, by rumors of the woman's unfaithfulness, to bring her back to this country.

The family arrived in Trotter on May 28. They had rented a house lived at the home of Michael Meholik. There they quarreled almost continually, and it is believed that the family troubles drove the murderer insane. The unborn child is said to have been the cause of the tragedy. One of Meholik's relatives, a distant cousin, came to this country shortly after the family arrived in Trotter, and was a frequent visitor at the house. Yesterday he was visiting the woman. When her husband entered the room, it is said, she told him he was not to be a pillow slip which Mrs. Meholik had hidden him before she left the old country.

That Meholik was dissatisfied with the explanation and that he brooded over the affair is indicated. In the morning he went to his room at St. John the Evangelist Church. During the remainder of the day he sat alone at the house, watching his little daughter at play with several other children. The youngsters were playing in the street beneath the large maple trees, and frequently it was noticed by neighbors that Meholik's eyes would light up and a smile would steal across his face as Irene passed in view. She was his pet.

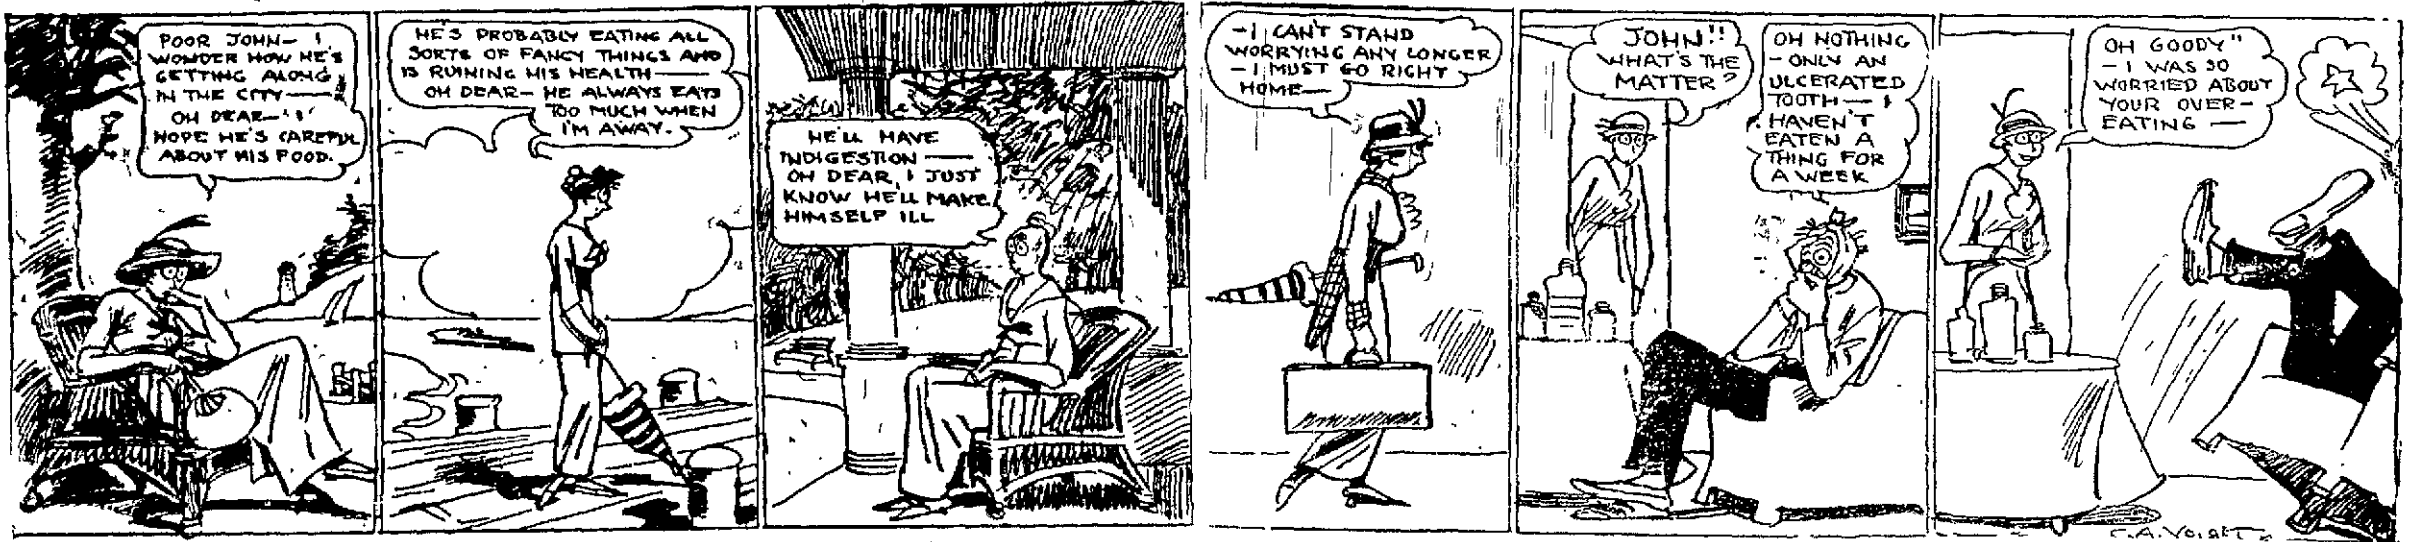

At 9 o'clock he called the child into the yard and sent her to bed. Shortly after he told the boys to retire. About 11 o'clock the wife went up stairs. There are two rooms on the second floor of the Meholik home. One, a large one in the front, contained two beds, and the other, considerably smaller, contained one. The parents occupied a large brass bed, likewise near the front windows, and a white enamel bed was used by the three younger children. There was no other furniture in the room. It was even bare of floor covering.

When Meholik went up stairs he had a revolver containing five chambers loaded. In the pockets of his trousers were 14 cartridges. In another pocket he had a razor, and an ax standing in a corner of the room, gave mute evidence that if the revolver failed to work, it would be used.

After entering the bedroom, the murderer's actions were deliberate. He closed the door and turned the strong wooden latch, insuring himself against interruption. Then he walked to the bed.

RAILROAD WAGES AND RATES.

In spite of the strike vote of the railway brotherhoods, it is not thought that there will be any summary action taken; but that, on the other hand, there will in due time be a satisfactory settlement of the demands of the conductors and trainmen, most likely through arbitration under an amended Erdman act.

The railroads have earnestly protested against this act, under which the demands of their employes have been uniformly and cheerfully granted in spite of the protests of the railroads that they have not been permitted to advance their freight rates to compensate for former wage advances. Their protests have not, however, been based on this fact, but upon the fact that the arbitration board under the present Erdman law is too small to pass upon a question involving so many men and so many millions of dollars. The railroad unions are reported as agreeing to this proposition, and an effort is being made to push the amended bill through Congress in time to have it apply to the present wage dispute, it being understood that as modified the railroads will agree to arbitration under it, thus guaranteeing the country against a tie-up of its transportation system. It is to be hoped that the Democrats will demonstrate in this case their capacity for constructive statesmanship.

It is evident that the railroads will have to pay to conductors and trainmen an advance in wages commensurate with the advances made to engineers and firemen, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission will in fairness permit the railroads to increase their rates. The government cannot become a railroad wrecker without running a fine chance of making some beautiful political wrecks.

The railroads paid liberal wage advances about a year ago under a half promise of increased freight rates. The latter, however, were denied. The railroads have managed to get along very well in spite of this. They have paid excellent dividends, met some extraordinary losses and laid up something in the way of surplus.

But they have been able to do this because of the exceptionally excellent business they have been doing. If this business declines in volume, the railroads will be unable to earn dividends and will be lucky if they have enough money to meet their interest charges after paying the expenses of operation. There is every prospect that this is possible, and it is not just nor honest that the holders of railroad stocks should be deprived of all revenue from their investments and robbed of a large portion of the intrinsic value of such property. Railroad rates are still discriminatory, and some of them are perhaps higher now than they ought to be, but their adjustment should be equitable to all interests.

DIRECT PRIMAVERIS.
With the signing of the Direct Primary bill by the Governor the State Convention in Pennsylvania passes away.

The elimination of the convention removes from politics one of its popular attractions. No longer will the delegates gather at Harrisburg or Allentown or some other urban community where the town is thickest and the shooting and the tumult never dies until the capitals and the corporate giant. The brass bands and the parades; the perfect oratory; the mysterious kamashoe work; the excitement, suppressed and suppressed; all these things so dear to the heart of the people who do the work are gone.

Hereafter candidates for all offices from Governor and United States Senator down to Ward Constable and Township Supervisor will be nominated by popular vote. The primary will not, however, be free from political manipulation. The Crawford county system was long in use in Fayette county, when a Democratic nomination was equivalent to an election, and the Democratic leaders had frequent occasion to plant their candidates in various sections of the county to kill off objectionable candidates by dividing their home votes.

The Progressive presumption that the abolition of state conventions will nullify the influence of leadership, known in the other party as bossism, is somewhat doubtful. If this influence has in times past been sufficient to nominate delegates willing in the convention to follow that leadership or to be dictated to by that bossism, the same influence will be a force in the primary, in favor of approved candidates on the ticket.

What's In a Name?

Shakespeare wrote: "The choicest treasure mortal times afford is spotless reputation."

Whether we are in business or in a profession, whether we are large or small, if our success depends upon our dealing with the public, a fair and honest reputation is indeed a choice treasure.

To have no reputation is almost as undesirable as to have a bad one.

Sometimes an enterprising manufacturer arranges to distribute his product through an equally enterprising retailer. In this way two substantial reputations unite in a common cause. Each strengthens and fortifies the other.

The retailer who has not yet enjoyed the benefits of selling a nationally known article and of being helped by the manufacturer's "spotless reputation" tucked onto his own is overlooking one of the finer points in latter day merchandising.

If you are interested in local advertising for national products write to the BUREAU OF ADVERTISING, AMERICAN NEWS-PAPER PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION, World Building, New York.

5 O'clock Closing and Why it Should Interest You

On July 7th, this store and a few of the other leading stores of this city, who have always been ready to respond to any progressive movement in which the public is interested, inaugurated the early closing movement. The word has been passed along by a generous public that is always considerate of the welfare of the working people, especially when early closing can be brought about without loss or inconvenience to all concerned. You, personally, are to decide whether this movement shall continue. If you can arrange to do your buying during the cool hours of the morning or early afternoon early closing will continue; otherwise, it will be necessary to keep open an hour longer each evening during the hot summer months. Our view is that every woman would prefer to be at home at that hour and get the evening meal over with as soon as possible. What do you think about it?

SCOTSDALE, July 14.—Following an afternoon that was both warm and marked by winds, came a night of electricity and rain and wind. Last night was one of the stormiest here in years, and there was but short intervals that thunder and lightning were not contributing to keep awake those who do not sleep well under such circumstances. The day was a very lovely one and like an autumn one in its general tone. In the evening along the horizon the lightning began to flash and the storm raged at this locality about midnight. From that time on until morning storm was going intermittently. There was one particular heavy rainstorm, the wind dashing the rain in sheets. Superintendent J. A. Burton of the Citizens' Water Company, who is much interested in rainstorms, said that the gauge showed a rainfall of one and one-tenth inches, which is going some. Mr. Burton was hoping that the big part of this was also present on the watershed of the Scottdale reservoir, as he says that the water is down several feet, and rains are much needed to replenish the supply. He incidentally urges that care be taken not to waste the water, which suggestion appeals to everyone interested in the supply for the town.

No special damage was reported thus far from the storm. Trees were most damaged and many branches, strewn the fields and roads. On the higher hills the wind got to the proportions of a hurricane at times, and grain fields and corn fields were beaten down by the wind and rain combined.

CARNIVAL IN.

The carnival aggregation arrived on Sunday and prepared to show under the auspices of the Volunteer Firemen. The boys of the town gave a concert on the streets Sunday evening and a ballroom man made a loud voiced announcement of the attractions and aims and ends of the show. Beautiful Mrs. Joseph Leiter Turns Shoemaker for Children's Sake, Following Latest Fad in Paris

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Mrs. Joseph Leiter has turned shoemaker. She has taken up the latest Paris fad of making one's own shoes. Mrs. Leiter, who is regarded in society circles here and in New York and Chicago as 'the perfect mother of wealth,' has fashioned shoes for her children which are designed for solid comfort in summer. The Leiters are at present staying at their summer place, the Glass House in the Woods, in the Virginia woods along the Potomac. Instead of letting her little ones run barefooted there, she has done the next best thing and has designed their shoes something like the old-fashioned sandals, made of cloth instead of leather. Women of fashion in Paris are all designing their own shoes now.

Milady's Mirror

Why Try to Keep Young?

Some people—and they must be deep great fatalists or else they must have a great fondness for sweets and good-looking—decide that they were born to be fat and that no amount of dieting will make them thin. This has not much to do with youth, excepting that it is quite true that some persons are born to look their age and some are born to look always younger than they are.

It is as if making an effort to look young would be fruitless of results in many cases, and so it is.

The woman who goes through life trying to look young, taking a cheerful, smiling outlook on everything about her, a healthy, enthusiastic interest in the world in general, can do much to retain youth. In fact, she never grows old in the sense of the word which signifies out of date and faded. The woman, too, who takes care of her health, who looks to her diet when it is convenient to do so and who takes due precautions regarding her skin and hair, runs a good chance of keeping a healthy and youthful appearance throughout life.

But the woman who tries everlastingly and unceasingly to keep young generally ends up by looking old and faded before her day. And certainly her frame of mind is far from normal, far from youthful. She avoids thinking herself, she rests a prescribed number of hours or minutes each day, she spends hours fussing over her hair and her nails and her eyebrows and her skin, she eats only such things as she knows she ought to eat, no matter how much she wants to eat other things, and what is the result?

Perhaps she does look young, perhaps her cheek has a more delicate bloom than the weathered, comfortable-looking cheek of her sister who has gone through life getting the most out of it, and perhaps she will stay young so long as she can spend hours a day trying to do so. But her youth is really only skin deep. If she is forced to live in different circumstances for a time, where she cannot devote most of her time to preserving her complexion, she fades quickly, and all the hours spent in ensuring youth are gone for nothing.

Peterson Krasotkin, the great Russian anarchist, said in an article about his experiences in prison that he thought he, a city-bred man used to the damp stone houses of St. Petersburg, about the confinement of the old dark dump Russian prisons better than did strong, country-bred men, perhaps much stronger and more robust than he. The change from the fresh country air and well-ventilated houses to the ill-ventilated and dingy prison cells was so great that it broke down their health.

Lemon as Toilet Aid.

The next time any one hands you a lemon do not feel offended but turn the lemon on your forehead by accepting the lemon graciously and using it to improve or add beauty to your features.

If you are a blond you will find the lemon very useful when shampooing time comes around. After you have cleansed your hair with soap and water rub the strained lemon juice into the scalp and hair. It is necessary to rinse the hair well after this. The lemon will keep the hair bright and make it fluffy. It is well to remember that whenever any hair is shampooed the work should not be considered complete until the hair and scalp are dry. Too many girls grow tired and let the water run out of the hair as best it can. This is a big mistake for the damp condition is apt to give one a cold or it may produce rheumatism of the head and shoulders. If you have not the strength to give the shampoo yourself ask your sister or some kind friend to help you out and offer to do as much for her.

To Keep the Hands White and Soft.

Use a soap rich in oil and contain little alkali to crack and harden the skin. After the hands have been cleansed and the roughness of the skin removed from the soap should be rubbed into the hands and wrists. Continue the rubbing until all the lather has been absorbed or there is very little to wipe away. The oil feeds the skin, keeps it soft and prevents the shriveling appearance and feeling which come especially to hands that are kept for long periods in hot water. Hands thus treated are soft and white. It is important to remember that the lather which is rubbed in is not the lather with which the hands are cleansed but a fresh lather, made after the cleansing has been completed.

Cold Sore Treatment.

A cold sore treatment which is simplicity itself is as follows: Wet the slightly blister with liquid camphor, then first on subulate of bismuth. In this way the sore is protected by a paste. After applying the healing paste the sore must be left to shed its scab. Disregard this precaution and you will find it to be a cold sore girl forever and aye.

A Fruit Tonic.

Grapefruit eaten with sugar is considered one of the healthiest breakfast foods. It is a great aid to digestion, and the fact that it is so improves the physical condition and in turn one's beauty is enhanced.

An institution is the lengthened shadow of one man.—Emerson.

A CAMPAIGN OF ODDITIES.

When the Log Cabin and Hard Cider

Enthusiasm Rejoiced.
Political enthusiasm has taken many forms during the lifetime of this nation. The Harrison-Van Buren presidential campaign of 1840 was in some respects the most remarkable the country has ever seen. "From May till November," says one historian, "it seemed as if all able-bodied citizens simply went about in processions to attend these meetings."

The great oddity of the campaign was the log cabin, the coon and the cider barrel. The log cabin idea originated with an opposition paper which had said slightly that "William Henry Harrison better go back to Indiana and stay there in his log cabin drinking hard cider."

The taunt was taken up by Harrison's followers. Log cabins sprang up all over the Union. In every town there was a house warming, and the log cabin was thrown open to the public amid general rejoicing. On the roof was a live raccoon, and a barrel of cider stood before the door, where any one who desired might drink all he chose.

It was a campaign of oddities. Some of the symbols have never been surpassed for genuine absurdity.—Magazine of American History.

SIMPLICITY IN THE HOME.

There is Such a Condition as Having Too Many Furnishings.

Many nervous, irritable, dissatisfied, unhappy women would become calm and contented if they would store, give or throw away half of their belongings. Some have abandoned elegant residences and taken their families into hotels or boarding houses who could have continued to keep up their homes if, instead of giving up their houses themselves, they had done away with the superfluous furnishings.

Some one, often the mistress herself, must clean and care for every article of furniture, no matter how humble its use or how ornamental its function. This round of duties proves many times to be a grievous burden on delicate shoulders.

There is such a thing possible as having too many utensils and tools to work with, so that taking out, replacing and keeping them clean and in order add to the daily labor. Too much furniture in a room, so that walking through it seems a perilous attempt to steer a course without disaster, too many garments to wear, for time is consumed in caring for them, and even in choosing what to put on.—Suburban Life Magazine.

A Widow's Curious Cap.

A very curious cap forms the "widow's weeds" of the Australian aborigine in one part of the great island continent. Near the northern head of the Murray river it is the custom for widows to attend upon the tombs of their departed lords. Then after shaving their heads they cover them with pipe clay kneaded into a paste. The head is first covered with a net to prevent the clay from sticking too tightly to the skin, a misfortune which is partly averted by the amount of grease with which every Australian native is anointed. A layer of this clay several inches in thickness is plastered over the head and when dry forms a sort of skullcap exactly fitting the head on which it was molded. As it weighs several pounds, the widow's cap cannot be comfortable.

Weather Vane.

The best weather vane are made with the greatest nicety and precision, so that they balance perfectly and turn with the least possible wear. The vane is, of course, longer on one side of the socket than on the other or it would not turn with the wind. But its weight is the same on both sides. If it is a narrow vane, for instance the weight of the solid head is evenly distributed to that of the longer projecting but thinner feather end, and all vane, whatever they may be, are balanced as to weight and so adjusted that they turn easily and with the least possible friction.

Mrs. Henpeck—Shame on you for growling about Dr. Bolus. Didn't he just bring you back from the jaws of death and—Henpeck (wearily)—And back to the jaws of life.

BEACH COSTUME.

Just the Thing For Knockabout Wear.

WHITE STRIPED BLOUSE SUIT.

With this gray and white striped serge suit a red straw hat with a red veil is most effective. The velvet reticule is black, and buttoned walking boots of black patent leather accompany the costume.

Clothes Moth Easy to Kill.

The moth that destroys clothing has been studied by the Pennsylvania division of zoology to such good purpose that Dr. Surface gives this advice about its destruction.

"You can destroy the clothes moths by saturating with benzine or gasoline the fabric which they infest. If you will dissolve a very slight proportion of corrosive sublimate in alcohol using not more than one part by weight to 100 parts of water and pour or sprinkle this over a cloth it will poison it and render it immune to them."

"Where clothes moths infest articles that can be spread and shaken it is a good plan to take them into the sun shine in an open yard and whip them thoroughly with strong whips and air them well. If one can place small articles in an oven and watch the temperature that it does not get higher than something like 150 to 160 degrees he can kill this pest by heat. Where the articles are small enough to put them into a closed vessel a very excellent method is to put them into something that can be closed tightly and pour over them or set upon them a shallow pan containing the liquid known as carbon bisulphide and let it stand and fumigate three or four hours or more. At least one pound of this should be used for each 100 cubic feet of space and more will do no harm. Keep fire away from it, as it is explosive, the same as the fumes of benzine or gasoline."

"A harrel will do very well for this purpose, fastening over the top of it two or more sheets of oil cloth, holding it in place by a hoop placed outside. As a last resort for household pests we can fill back upon fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas, which is certain to be effective if properly done but which is both expensive and somewhat dangerous when used by careless persons."

Basket or Crock Holder.

Out strips of straw paper about three inches wide and build lightly. Fasten to the lower crock or basket with glue. Sage green or brown would be pretty.

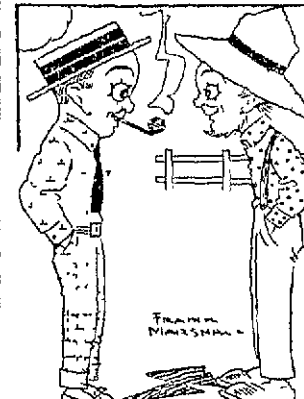

CIRCUMSTANCES ALTER CASES.

"What's an end and a dog's end?" "He's a fellow who keeps you from becoming one yourself."

BUSINESSLIKE.

Bookkeeper—Figure out how many games this year, Joe.
Office Boy—If I do I'll have to get paid for it, that's outside my regular work.

ONLY PASSABLE.

Summer Boarder—Is the soil about this part of the country pretty good?
Farmer—Well, it ain't good enough to raise a mortgage on.

(No manhood with an effort and fought his way back to the world of his own making, that had become to him a second nature.)

"Mrs. Robertson," he went on in his customary measured slowness, "the case stands like this: your father and husband are seeking to ruin me by making up a story of my past. That story involves you. You ask me to protect you. You ask me to use my methods to make me do so. I shall protect you as far as I can. I shall do so to the extreme, unless such protection must involve the welfare of the people who trust me. I will not stand by weakly and see my life work for my country ruined. I will not betray the trust of millions whose only hope rests on me. This story your father has dug up must not be made public. You understand that? It must not be made public! At any cost to myself or to you. Is that clear?"

"Then," she asked in tired desperation, "what do you mean to do?"

"Nothing at all," he returned, "so long as your father and husband keep this story quiet."

"But surely they won't publish it without knowing my—the Woman's name?"

"That is what I'm beginning to be afraid of. They may feel so absolutely certain of learning the name later, that they will circulate the story on the floor of the house tonight and in tomorrow's newspapers. And then, when they find out who the Woman really is, it will be too late to suppress it. You must stop that story. If it gets out I shall lose the light. And I can not do that, even to save you."

"In other words," she retorted, "to save yourself you will hide behind me?"

"If you care to put it so."

"But," she urged, "I can't speak to father or Mark about it. I'm not supposed to know anything about it. Suppose—suppose I can't stop it?"

"You coward! You pitiful hypocrite!"

"You must. It's the only chance. There's nothing else to be done. Proceeding this minute just to get their proofs in order to launch the story tonight. They intend to use it to prevent my certain victory. And they must not. At the first sign that they mean to do so I shall have to go to your father and tell him who the Woman is! I would rather be shot. But—"

"Oh," she burst out hysterically, "you wouldn't—you couldn't—do that! You're not so unutterably low as to damn the future of a woman who once trusted you—who—"

"I've told you," he replied, "that I am not in this fight as a man, but as a leader. It is one woman's good name against the welfare of a nation. You haven't the right to let me as a man defeat the great principles I stand for."

"You coward! You pitiful hypocrite!" she raged. "You haven't the manhood to stand by your own past. You'll let a woman pay your debts—and pay them with everything that makes her life worth living. In all these years I've felt that if a moment like this should ever come, I could rely on your honor. I've always believed you would at least—what is the old phrase?—'perjure yourself like a gentleman!' It's easy enough to save yourself and call it a duty to the people. A coward can always find an excuse. Oh, I could carry it all through safely, even now, if only you were a man instead of a block of stone."

"It is too late now for reproaches," he answered. "For years I've been building up a fighting strength—waiting for the people's chance of victory. And that chance has come. If they lose, it shall not be because of their leader."

"A woman's reputation is worth more than any mere political victory," he commanded. "Tell your father and husband so. They are preparing to wreck a woman's life to save themselves. No code of honor stands in their way. They are out to win. To win at any price. And it is only fair that the filthy methods they use should come back on their own heads. If one man must be betrayed, why should it be the innocent? Why not the Woman who is—guilty?"

"Matti!" she wailed, her defense all swept away in a breath. "If you let my husband know—do you realize what it would mean? It would mean a separation—a divorce—disgrace—everlasting disgrace! Am I to pay that price for your victory?"

"That is for you to decide. I simply warn you not to let your husband and father move against me on those lines. That is all. Good-by. I will come back later to see Mr. Blake."

"Wait!" she begged. "There is one thing you can do—one thing you must do. It won't endanger your success. My father and Mark and some other men are coming here for a conference. I want you to meet them and to urge them not to use this horrible story—"

"It would be useless," he objected, though moved in spite of himself, by her absolute brokenness. "But I'll try. I promise you. I'll try my best. And I will guard your secret as long as it can be guarded. Until there is no other possible chance. Then—well, this story must be stopped. That is all. It is a waste of words for me to say how sorry I am to have made you so unhappy tonight. Good-by."

He was entirely master of himself now; cold, impersonal, phlegmatic. No one seeing him take his leave at the door of the Robertson auto would have guessed his brain contained a solitary thought beyond the possible winning of a move in his cherished political game.

The moment Standish was gone, Grace collapsed. She sank down beside the desk table, helpless to move or think. Everything was in a black whirl. The hour which for years she had dreaded; for which she had so long and so carefully prepared.

She moved convulsively. The motion brought her hand in contact with the cold metal of the telephone on the table before her. And with the touch came inspiration. Catching up the instrument she unhooked the receiver.

"Miss Kelly," she called tremulously. "Is that you? You know my voice. I—I am alone here—Can you come, please? At once. I must see you—Oh, thank you—At once, please."

She rose unsteadily to her feet, as might a half-conscious pugilist who will not yet give up a hopeless fight.

CHAPTER XIV.

An Odd Alliance.

The sound of a step in the hall outside brought Grace to the door. She opened it stealthily, as though bent on some mission of dire peril. And, as stealthily, Wanda slipped into the room, closing the door behind her. The two women faced each other in silence. It was Grace who spoke first.

"I—I sent for you, Miss Kelly," she began uncertainly, "because—because—oh, I'm hummed in everywhere! I don't know which way to turn!"

"I see," said Wanda quietly. "Standish is going to throw you over to save himself? I was afraid so."

"I—I said some cruel—abominable things to you a little while ago, Miss Kelly," stammered Grace. "Won't you forgive me? You see, I was fighting for my very life. I'm sorry."

"I'm sorry I was cranky," said Wanda impulsively. "And I guess I understand all about it. I thought first that Fate had let me in on this so that I could show you up. But I think now it was so I could be of some use to you. You see, there's only we two women. And we've got to fight that whole crowd."

"You'll help? You'll stand by me?"

"That's what I've been trying to tell you, Mrs. Robertson. You've paid for all you did. And I don't want you to pay any more. You're a ten times better woman this minute than a lot who have the law on their side. So forget all that and let's see what we can do."

Grace, to Wanda's dismay, broke down and sobbed in hopeless wretchedness.

"Don't! Don't!" pleaded the girl. "Now—oh, dear!" a sob choking her. "Now you've got me going! We must brace up and do something. There's plenty of spare hours for crying. But this isn't one of them. We've a bunch of trouble ahead of us. But we're going to win out. So let's get busy."

"By this time, most likely, they've applied to central for all the numbers called up from this hotel since seven o'clock tonight. We have to turn in our calls to central, you know. And one of those numbers will be the one they want. But it'll be hard for them to find which one. Yours would be the very one they wouldn't think of."

"Can't we stop them from getting the list?"

"No. Their pull is too strong. But it'll take time to run all the numbers down. And time's the one thing they haven't got. Time! That's our one card. They want to use this story tonight. If we can keep them from doing that—"

"If worst comes to worst," exclaimed Grace, "I can go to my father and tell him. He loves me enough to keep it from every one. Even from Mark. I'll break his heart. But it will stop the story."

"No," decided Wanda, after a moment's thought. "It's too late for that. The thing's gone too far. Van Dyke and your husband and the rest are as keen for the name as he is. If he pretended to weaken or tried to stop them now, they'd push on in spite of him."

"Then we've got to work alone. We've got to keep them from finding out. We've got to let 'em go to 'em. I'd give seven dollars to know what they're doing now," mused Wanda. "It's tough to work in the dark like this."

"Suppose," suggested Grace, in sudden dread, "suppose they try to force you to tell? They're clever—and they're merciless. And—"

"They'll have a sweet time. I'd like a colored photograph of the bunch of men who can make me talk if I don't want to. No, no! Don't you worry about that, Mrs. Robertson."

"It wouldn't be as easy as you think I'm afraid. They are so determined—"

"Yes, I suppose it would be liable to spoil the evening for them and make them real peevish. But it would take up a lot of time they haven't got."

"You won't let them break you down? Oh, I've no right to allow you to endanger your welfare for me! When they find you won't tell, they may—"

"Don't let that keep you awake, Mrs. Robertson. I know I'm taking chances in bucking the machine. Lord knows what they'll do to me. But it's worth the risk. And I'm going to stand by you till the cows come home. We—"

A rattling, as some one in the hall tried the outer door of the suite, brought both women to their feet in wordless fear. Then Mark Robertson's voice reached them.

"Grace!" called Robertson from the hall. "Are you asleep? The door's locked."

"This way," whispered Grace, pointing to the inner rooms of the suite.

She Tried to Speak, Faltered, and Hurried From the Room.

"Go down the passage. There's another door at the end of it, leading out into the hall."

"All right," whispered Wanda in reply. "Good luck to you. Keep your nerve. That's the main thing. Just keep your nerve."

"Grace!" called Mark impatiently. Grace crossed to the locked door, paused a moment until she heard the door at the far end of the suite open and close, then unlocked the outer door.

"Did you fall asleep?" asked Mark, as he came in. "How did the door happen to be locked?"

"I didn't know I'd locked it," replied Grace. "It was careless of me. It seems I've failed this evening to keep you waiting. First at the station. Then—"

"It's queer," interrupted Mark. "I could have sworn I heard a woman's voice—not yours—talking in here. Just as I tried the door. Probably it was in the next suite."

"Probably. I'm all alone. And I'm not given to soliloquy. How is the fight going?"

"Badly. But we'll win. We're doing all we can to get certain material we need."

"When do you expect the others?"

"They'll be here in a minute. I came on ahead. I'm a fool, I suppose. But whenever you're in Washington, every minute I'm not with you seems time lost. So I made some sort of an excuse and hurried on. Why, he asked in sudden alarm, "what's the matter?"

CHAPTER XV.

A Wasted Plea.

Grace started guiltily at her husband's troubled question. He took her face between his hands and raised it to the light.

"You're lying!" he exclaimed in quick dread. "You look actually ghastly. Shall I send for a doctor?"

"What nonsense!" she laughed. "I'm all right. Just a little tired. A good night's sleep will put me on my feet again."

"I've buried myself so deep in politics," he frowned self-acusingly, "that I hadn't sense enough to remember that you might be worn out and might want to go to bed. But I didn't notice that you looked badly at the station. It wasn't till just now when the light happened to strike your face—Oh, but I'm glad to see you here again, sweet heart!"

"Really?" she asked almost timidly; drinking in her husband's words as a condemned man might gaze on his last sunset.

"Glad?" he cried. "Indeed I am. I'm afraid I'll never get past the honeymoon stage. You don't want me to, do you?"

"I wonder," she faltered, "—if you'd never met me—if you'd—"

"I'd never have known what I missed. That's where nature is kind. People who miss the real love never know. We only know when we've found it."

"But," she pursued, "when people find out too late—afterward—that's the bitterest thing in life. I should think it isn't easy to judge people—women, especially—who find out too late—and who try then to get their birthright of happiness in spite of everything."

"Such people have lost their birthright," he answered. "They've sold it for a mess of pottage. That's one of the problems of the ages, Grace. And man has made laws to govern it. Laws that are wise and—"

"And often bitterly cruel."

"Laws are for the many. Not for the few. And the few must obey them for the good of the many. But I didn't give the rest of the crowd the slip, just to bore you by discussing ethics. Was it foolish of me to run away, simply to have a few extra minutes with you? I've been fighting so hard—"

"And fighting fairly, too, I know. Dear, you'd never take an unfair advantage of—"

"Politics," answered Mark, "is war. And war is the science of finding the weakest point in your enemy's armor and hammering away at it till he yields. For instance, we've just found the weakest sort of spot in Standish's armor and—"

"You have? What is it?"

"There are only two weak spots in most men's armor. One is money, crookedness. The other is women. In Standish's case it was a woman. An affair he got tangled up in five years ago."

"And you'll stoop to use such a weapon as that?" she cried, indignant.

"Why not? He'd use the same sort of weapon against us, fast enough; if he had it."

"But that isn't fair fighting, Mark. It's disgusting scandal."

"That's his lookout, not ours. If he chanced to know something damaging in my private life, he'd use it in a minute."

"But if I asked you—if I begged you—"

"Don't ask me, dear. This is one of the things you don't understand. You'll have to leave it to me."

"Perhaps," she retorted desperately, "I may understand it far better than you do. You say there's a woman concerned in it. This scandal will pillory her and—"

"That type of woman belongs in the pillory."

"You are cruel!" she cried. "You yourself admit that there is a chance the Woman may have repented. Are you going to refuse her the benefit of that chance?"

"The chance is too small to be considered. Don't let's talk of it. You can't—"

"Then," she continued, unheeding, "there's something else you don't consider. Seemingly married. She may be the wife of some honorable man who loves her and thinks she is perfect. All his heart and all his ideals may be bound up in her. Are you going to ruin his life, too?"

"Dear," answered Mark, "the sort of fool who marries women of that kind (like the man who teaches his wife to be a 'dead game sport') deserves what he gets. And generally he gets it. Though, in both cases, he doesn't always find it out. Don't waste sympathy on him. If he married her, he probably knew what she was. If he didn't know, it's time he learned. No sane man should want to live in a fool's paradise."

"But her family! Her parents? Her brothers or sisters? Surely they aren't to blame. And they will be disgraced, too."

"Such things are rather apt to run in families. Cankered flowers don't grow from clean roots. You're wasting a lot of sympathy over a woman and a man who are unworthy to speak their dear name. There are your father and the rest, getting out of the elevator now. Go to bed, dear girl, and try to get a good rest. Don't sit up for me. I'll probably be up all night on this Standish affair. Good night, sweetheart."

As he bent to kiss her, her arms clung to his neck like a frightened child's. She tried to speak, faltered, and hurried from the room.

CHAPTER XVI.

Sixty Seconds Leeway.

In they trooped, Jim Blake at their head—Van Dyke, Neilgan, Gregg, and (quickly bringing up the rear) Tom. Grace had quitted the library at her husband's order. Now, starkly unshamed of the eavesdropper's role, she was standing tense, expectant, her ear to the closed door leading to the inner rooms. Through the thin panel she could hear every syllable from the library. Her own name was the first word she caught.

"Grace turned in!" Jim Blake was asking; and Robertson replied:

"Yes. She's all tired out. We can talk freely here. No one will interrupt. Sit down. The cigars are over there. And here's the Scotch."

"Has Standish been around yet?" queried Van Dyke.

"Oh, he'll be here all right," vowed Grace, before Mark could answer. "He knows we've got him in a hole. He'll—"

"But have we?" argued Van Dyke. "As far as I can see, it's still the other way around."

"It's had enough to be delayed by anything," fumed Mark. "But it's ten times worse when we're blocked by a Small Fruit Pests.

Garden vegetables are remarkably free from diseases and insect pests. This is due to the fact that they are nearly all annuals and they are grown in small quantities and on different locations every year or so.

Small bush fruits, on the other hand, are almost certain to be seriously damaged by a number of parasites unless they receive the necessary care to protect them. The conditions under which this class of back yard crops grows is favorable to the development of these pests.

The plants are long lived and frequently carry the larvae or the spores of their respective parasites over from season to season. As handled by most people, the diseased stems, leaves and fruits are left on the ground about the bushes, and parasites propagate in such rubbish with vigor.

Probably the most general and the most destructive pest encountered on the bush fruits is some form of foliage eating worm, like the larvae of the saw-fly. These worms appear almost as soon as the leaves are out and they will soon strip the entire bush of its foliage unless they are promptly exterminated. It is fortunate that they can be killed very easily if properly treated, and the treatment will apply equally well with any leaf-eating worm.

The saw-fly's eggs are laid on the under side of the leaves, especially those leaves located well down in the center of the plant. Watch your berry bushes closely and get busy as soon as you notice little holes in any of the leaves, as that means that the worms are there and are getting in their work of destruction. If taken in hand now, there will be little trouble or expense involved, so act promptly. Get some powdered white hellebore and dust it on all of the foliage in the region where the worms have begun work. Scatter it thickly and get it on both sides of the leaves. Do the dusting early in the morning, before the dew is off the leaves. The powder will then stick fast and will remain until the next heavy rain.

If it should rain immediately, powder again. This whole bush should be treated if the worms have got a good start, and if you allow these worms to strip the foliage the fruit will be small, shriveled and tasteless. Remember that the leaves are both the digestive and respiratory organs of the plant, and without them it can neither eat nor breathe.

If large numbers of ants appear on the bushes, investigate the under surface of the leaves for tiny green aphids, or plant lice. A good spraying with tobacco water will fix them.

Red rust is prevalent in some sections and it is very deadly and especially contagious. It is a parasitic disease which causes spots of rusty-looking fungi to appear on the stems. Cutting out and burning diseased canes and spraying the rest frequently with Bordeaux mixture is the only means of combating it. This mixture is hard to handle in a small garden.

For mildew on currants and gooseberries, use powdered sulphur and apply it in the form of dust while the dew is on the leaves.

turning over the paper to Van Dyke. "Good," approved Blake. "Now we'll get to what we're chasing. And we'll get it mighty quick."

Van Dyke and Neilgan were already poring over the sheet of numbers that the lawyer had just spread on the table under the lamp.

"Now, then, Standish," cried Robertson; "we're ready to begin. One of these numbers leads directly to the Woman. We'll put a man at work tracing each one of them. In a few hours at longest we will have what we want. And when we find the Woman we'll lay bare every soiled page in her life and in yours."

It was Standish who broke the moment's silence.

"Very well, Robertson," he said calmly. "I've done what I promised to do. And I have failed. You drive the now to the use of your own weapons. I shall have to fight exposure with exposure."

"No, no!" moaned Grace, incoherent with fear.

Mark Robertson had caught up Standish's defiance and had stepped forward to confront him.

"In other words, Mr. Standish," he demanded, "you threaten me? That's an empty threat. There is nothing in my life you have not already shouted from the housetops."

"Don't be too sure," warned Standish, meeting Mark's scornful glare with unconcern.

"What do you mean? Speak up!"

"Mr. Standish!" pleaded Grace. "I beg—"

FRATRICIDAL WAR IN BALKANS BLOODIEST IN WORLD'S HISTORY

Upward of 50,000 Men Killed Since Beginning of Hostilities.

Horrible Atrocities and Wholesale Massacres by Bulgarian Army, Reported.

BULGARIA and its former allies, Greece, Serbia and Montenegro, are now engaged in a death struggle over the spoils wrested from Turkey, after one of the bloodiest wars in history. Dispatches, which are undoubtedly authentic, state that upward of 50,000 men have lost their lives since the beginning of hostilities, which commenced at least ten days before a formal declaration of war was made. This is a greater slaughter than any recorded in the war against Turkey.

Roumania, having swiftly mobilized 600,000 troops, is already embroiled in the struggle and Austria, Russia and, in fact, all Europe is watching fearfully on the result. So terrible has been the slaughter that it is reported that Ferdinand, King Peter and King Constantine are already anxious to agree upon an armistice, if satisfactory terms can be arranged by the powers. Meanwhile horrible atrocities and wholesale massacres are reported from various towns and villages in the Balkans. Some of the worst of these occurred at Kiklis, Plavitsa and Raynovo, where men, women and children were burned alive by Bulgarians. At Kiklis the Bulgarian irregular troops, who are little more than brigands, burned to death 700 men by imprisoning them in a mosque, under which they exploded bombs, which set the building on fire.

No Quarter Given.

These outrages against the usages of civilized warfare resulted in reprisals by the Greeks and Serbs when brought in contact with the Bulgarians. Practically no quarter is given or demanded. A correspondent in Macedonia cables that the Bulgarians have in the most sanguinary in history, the attacks frequently being made at night, the soldiers fighting corps-corps, meeting at each other at a distance of thirty yards and then resorting to the bayonet.

In some instances both sides have advanced so closely that they had no room to use their bayonets but taking them off, utilized them like clubs. When even these weapons failed them they seized each other's throats and fought like wild beasts, strangling and biting each other ferociously.

at Kotebana and Isip, in Macedonia, a terrible battle was fought. It was practically a drawn battle, although the Bulgarian general, Kovachoff, was forced to withdraw owing to the failure of his reinforcements to arrive. Close to 40,000 men were killed or wounded in the three days' engagements, the Bulgarians losing upward of 20,000 men and the Serbians nearly as many.

Cholera Breaks Out.

To add to the other horrors of the war, cholera has broken out among the Serbian wounded at Belgrade and is now raging severely, the death rate rising daily. It is also decimating the Red Cross camps for the wounded on the field.

A terrible picture of the extent and effect of the war fever in the Balkans is given by Francis McCullough, the London Daily News correspondent, in Belgrade. McCullough states that the mutual hostility of the allies is intense and that the hatred which they now have for each other is far worse than that which they had for the Turk. "The natural consequence," he says, "is that manners have greatly degenerated and the people have become brutalized. Even the higher officials are brutal and unscrupulous. Their treatment of foreign diplomats and newspaper correspondents has never been equaled since the days of that drunkard grand seigneur who used to hit ambassadors between the eyes."

"In the light of recent revelations the great common crusade against the Turk, which so moved the heart of Christendom nine months ago, sinks to the level of a robber confederacy for the purposes of loot. The territorial greed which now displays itself naked and unshamed is not only disconcerting, it is hideous and awful."

Success of the Bulgarians.

The ultimate success of Bulgarian arms depends upon quick action. Unless she can speedily bring Serbia and Greece to subjection she is lost, for the Roumanian army, now on the move, which has already engaged in several minor skirmishes, will be thrown in the balance against her.

In the beginning the strategic aim of the Bulgarian movements was to cut off the Serbian army operating in northern Macedonia from Belgrade and Saloniki. To do this seven bridges on the Serbian railway north of Vranje were destroyed by the Bulgarians, thus isolating the Serbians on the north, while the capture of Bjergels by the Bulgarian army, which is forty-five miles northwest of Saloniki, cut them off from the Greeks on the south. These advantages, however, were minimized by the Greek successes in southern Macedonia and by the sturdy defense of the Serbian armies at Kotebana and Isip.

At present a great part of the Bulgarian army is cut off from supplies except such as it can obtain on the enemy's land and by road. A Greek force under King Constantine at Dolran having severed their railroad connections with Demirhisar and Serres. Late dispatches indicate that the Greeks now hold the latter city. A large amount of the Bulgarian army's provisions has also been captured by the Greeks, and this may cause a complete change in the Bulgarian plan of campaign, even necessitating making terms of peace.

Beginning of Hostilities.

The steps that led to this bitter warfare between the neighboring allies, even after the congress of the powers at London and definitely settled the apportionment of the territory of the defeated Turks among them, are curious. Summed up briefly they are as follows:

Serbia demanded the revision of the Serbo-Bulgarian treaty, which defined their respective spheres in the conquered territory. Bulgaria absolutely refused to agree to such revision.

Overtures were made by Serbia that both nations should partially demobilize their forces pending a settlement, but in view of the military dispositions of Serbia and Greece Bulgaria could not agree.

The czar warned both Serbia and Bulgaria as to the course that Russia would take toward the side which first started war and invited the allies to send their plenipotentiaries to St. Petersburg to arrange a settlement.

Serbia accepted, believing that the treaty would be modified. Bulgaria, however, refused to accept, requiring first an assurance that the treaty should be respected.

Not receiving this assurance, Bulgaria refused to enter into any agreement with the other allies. Instead she authoritatively prepared for war.

In the mountain her armies in the field and those of the other Balkan states came into conflict, the commanding generals of all acting without authority from their respective governments. Feeling at Vienna.

The czar's invitation to the allies to send their plenipotentiaries to St. Petersburg to arrange a settlement aroused much feeling in Vienna, the Austrian capital, where it was regarded as lending forward to a Russian protectorate over the Balkans, an event which might embroil Russia and Austro-Hungary in war also. But with the formal declaration of war, between the states, this danger was averted.

A dramatic feature of the interlocking war fever, which has been sweeping over southeastern Europe since the disagreement over the division of spoils arose, was the ultimatum forced upon King Charles of Roumania, giving him the choice of signing an order for the mobilization of the great Roumanian army of 500,000 men or abdication. Bill Dahlen Uncovers a Brilliant Young Catcher in Fisher

BROOKLYN, July 11—Bad Bill Dahlen seems to have picked up a catching find in Fisher. This youngster was given a chance to show what he could do behind the bat a few weeks ago and more than made good. Not alone did he catch a brilliant game on, but the head of the war party, Prime Minister Hristo Maritov, at the head of a mob of wildly shouting supporters, coerced him into signing the order.

According to the latest dispatches, Europe will now make no move to interfere in the struggle between the Balkan states. The problem which the powers now face is to localize hostilities and keep the Turk from entering the arena also, as the ports seem inclined to do.

MESSIAH'S KINGDOM.

The Glorious Day of Divine Favor is Nearing.

The period in which sin is permitted has been a dark night to humanity, never to be forgotten; but the glorious day of righteousness and divine favor is soon to be ushered in by Messiah. He, as the SON OF RIGHT-DOUSNESS, shall arrive and shine fully and clearly into and upon all, bringing healing and blessing, which will more than counterbalance the dreadful night of weeping, sighing, pain, sickness and death, in which the groaning creation has been so long. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the MORNING."
